

Employment law

An introduction to good practice and the law for employers.

Overview

This course is essential for anyone who recruits, manages and supervises staff. It looks at key legislation in a straightforward and accessible way, and will examine how the law and good practice is changing. Participants will have the opportunity to discuss their current practice in a supportive and confidential environment.

Who is it for?

Anyone who employs, recruits and selects staff.

Outcomes

At the end of the workshop participants will:

- be able to understand the main areas of legislation and good practice regarding the employment of staff
- understand the changes to the law and how these will affect them
- recognise the need to inform their staff about their rights
- understand anti-discriminatory practice and legislation
- gain confidence and find out where to go for further help

Format

This workshop can be delivered over one day or two half-day sessions.
